Annual Fundraising Campaign Off to a Running Start

The American Occupational Therapy Foundation has embarked on an ambitious fundraising drive to raise $220,000 this year. Campaign contributions to AOTF will be used to fund the new Institute for the Study of Occupation and Health and support the Foundation's ongoing education and research programs.

"When we contribute to the Foundation we are making a lasting investment in the future of occupational therapy," explains Jane Davis Rourk, AOTF President. "Our goal is to create a broad public understanding of the meaningful relationship between occupation and health in promoting a healthy environment for individuals, families, and communities."

Former AOTF secretary Hanna Gruen and director Ruth Ann Watkins are serving as co-chairs of the Annual Giving Committee. They have assembled a core of seventeen influential and hard-working volunteers who are committed to making the Foundation's 2000-01 Annual Giving Campaign a great success.

Committee members include Foundation advocates: Caroline Brayley, Dave Clark, Terry Crowe, Ann Grady, Cynthia Hughes Harris, Ann Hight, Barbara Kornblau, Sandye Jacobson Lerner, Lela Llorens, Maralynne Mitcham, Nancy Prendergast, Dianna

Puccetti, Barbara Schell, Leo Selker, Nancy Snyder, Sharon Stoffel, and Mary Sands. Each of these leaders has contributed personally to the Campaign and has reached out to colleagues, encouraging them to contribute to the Campaign as well.

"When we contribute to the Foundation we are making a lasting investment in the future of occupational therapy."

"All of us receive many requests to support deserving causes," says Hanna Gruen. "The Foundation genuinely appreciates the contributions of more than 5,000 loyal donors. We believe this is a great reflection on the value our colleagues place on the work of AOTF. I'm pleased to report that we

Institute Embarks Upon First Programs

Spring 2001 marks the launching of the first programs of the Foundation's new Institute for the Study of Occupation and Health. Through these initiatives, we will provide consultation and mentoring for occupational therapy educational programs in their transition to post-baccalaureate entry.

The Institute's initial offering is a regional workshop series designed by staff and volunteers from AOTA, ACOTE, and AOTF. Faculty teams will engage in comprehensive curriculum revision to ensure that occupation is the core of the educational program, evidence-based practice and research are prominent in developing critical thinking, and the curriculum design is consistent and coherent. We are pleased to report that OT programs across the country have indicated an interest in participating. Ultimately, we hope that at least 50 programs will take advantage of this opportunity.

In addition, the Institute is supporting an innovative model to study the effectiveness of a mentoring program to promote scholarship and creativity. We invited faculty teams from all professional-level programs to apply for a one-year consultation with an experienced mentor. These teams will work towards a revised curriculum that will exceed the new minimum requirements for entry-level

CORE Moves into Second Year

The Center for Outcomes Research and Education (CORE) at the University of Illinois at Chicago kicked off its second year with an exciting research symposium held on October 2-5, 2000. All 17 CORE fellows attended as well as occupational therapy doctoral students and guests. The focus was on providing a hands-on approach to successful grant writing and computerized data management.

Expert professors from a variety of departments at the University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) and Wayne State University provided a series of lectures. Topics included: participatory action research and clinical trials, qualitative research, random effects regression, and structural equation modeling. Several CORE fellows had their grant proposals publicly critiqued by the speakers as a way to strengthen their proposals. On the last day, two data software demonstrations were given on large scale data management and qualitative data management.

In addition, the CORE fellows held a number of small group meetings to plan ways to collaborate on grant proposals and to assist each other in moving forward with seeking funding for outcomes research in occupational therapy. A meeting was also held to begin planning an outcomes summit to be held at the AOTA Conference in 2002.

Through CORE, co-funded by AOTA and AOTF, a number of ongoing activities and events assist in disseminating information on outcomes research. A Research Colloquium Series, the creation of the CORE web site, an Institute at AOTA Conference in April 2001, and a CORE Workshop Series are all part of that effort. A Research Colloquium Series within the UIC Department of Occupational Therapy is open to the public several Monday afternoons per month. Topics related to outcomes research are presented and discussed.

The CORE web site is up and running and readers can access it at www.uic.edu/ahp/OT/coreindex.htm. Occupational therapists can find information on CORE fellows and their research, publications, and contact methods. A listing of CORE activities is also included as well as outcomes research bibliographies.

The Center is presenting an Institute at the AOTA Conference in April 2001 entitled, "Mentoring Occupational Therapy Researchers Within a Community of Scholars." Guidelines will be offered for immersing students as apprentices in research, multi-level mentoring, co-publication, involvement in grant writing, and other activities that allow occupational therapists to progressively participate in all aspects of scholarship.

For practitioners, a series of workshops co-sponsored by CORE, the Illinois Occupational Therapy Association and the Wisconsin Occupational Therapy Association will be offered. In February 2001, a workshop will be presented on "Life Course Planning: Assessing and Maintaining Health, Function, and Life Satisfaction while Aging in Place." In May 2001, another workshop on the "Occupational Therapy Psychosocial Assessment of Learning" will be held. ■

OTJR Evolves

by Carolyn M. Baum, PhD, OTR/L, FAOTA

I am pleased to accept the challenge of the editorship of The Occupational Therapy Journal of Research (OTJR). Changes in health care and society are requiring occupational therapy to focus on helping people gain the skills needed to balance the productive pursuit of multiple roles in families and communities. Never before has society been faced with such a large number of vulnerable populations such as the aging, individuals with chronic health conditions, victims of and perpetrators of violence, children at risk, and workers with excessive physical and mental demands. Occupational therapists are at the forefront addressing these needs, and it is time for OTJR to concentrate its effort on the dissemination of knowledge that will evolve the science of occupation and the practice of occupational therapy.

The members of the editorial board and I believe it is time to focus the articles selected for publication in OTJR on the evolving knowledge of occupation and health. We have consensus that the ICIDH-2: International Classification of Functioning and Disability, with its emphasis on improving the participation of persons with disabilities in society, mandates the profession to take a leadership role that will improve the lives of individuals. The classification includes body function/body system, activity, and participation (all within an environmental context) and provides a framework that captures much of the evolving scientific knowledge of occupation.

It is imperative to make public the profession's commitment to the study of occupation and health, and at the same time determine that our efforts are making a difference in the lives of those who are the recipients of our knowledge. We asked the Board of Directors of the American Occupational Therapy Foundation to approve a new name for The Occupational Therapy Journal of

Research, and I am pleased that the Board accepted this proposal. Beginning with the winter 2002 issue, the journal will be called OTJR: Occupation, Participation and Health. This name makes explicit our commitment to the study of occupation and health and to participation in society by those whom occupational therapists serve.

In addition, we hope to receive research articles that test models, enhance measurement of occupation, and demonstrate efficacy of interventions. We will strive to stimulate an international dialogue and provide a forum for interdisciplinary work that will further the understanding of the relationship of occupation and health.

Our aims are to make OTJR: Occupation, Participation and Health a mainstream journal, to increase the subscription base, and to again publish six issues per year. The profession's move to master's level entry should create an increased demand for the knowledge that will be forthcoming. OTJR was a vision of Wilma West. It is in her honor that we will take the journal forward and highlight the evolving science that she worked so hard to foster. ■ have the personal commitment of both the Foundation's Board of Directors and the AOTA Executive Board in launching this year's fundraising Campaign."

Campaign Co-Chair Ruth Ann Watkins adds, "As someone who practiced at a time when there was little theory in the field, I am especially excited about the focus of the AOTF Institute on synthesizing and organizing interdisciplinary knowledge about occupation. In forming new interdisciplinary bridges, we can create new knowledge and a broader frame of reference upon which to build occupational therapy practice."

To date the Foundation has past the quarter-mile mark on its course to the $220,000 goal. We hope to have everyone in the profession represented as donors to the Campaign. Ruth Ann Watkins urges, "Habits are very important in our lives. Giving to AOTF is a habit that I hope all occupational therapy practitioners will adopt!"

Please consider making a gift to AOTF your personal habit today. Use the clip-out below and send your gift to AOTF. Every contribution moves us closer to the finish line! ■

We Need Your Help!

As a charitable nonprofit, AOTF is funded by private contributions from individuals, corporations and other organizations. Your contribution will enable the Foundation to create a new Institute to provide an umbrella for AOTF's existing programs, including CORE, OTJR and faculty development activity.

practitioners. The five schools selected for this program are: University of New Hampshire, University of Southern Maine, St. Louis University, University of Texas/Pan Am, and Eastern Kentucky University. The mentors, Ann Grady, Barbara Hooper, Ruth Humphrey, Cathy Nielson, Jane Davis Rourk, Perri Stern, and project coordinator, Nedra Gillette, are looking forward to guiding the schools through this innovative process.

Our goal is to establish a community of scholars who will develop curriculum models that promote critical thinking, research, and other forms of scholarship. The idea for this program is based on the highly successful curriculum revision completed last year at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill published in The American Journal of Occupational Therapy, 54:6, pp. 586-597. ■

AOTF VISION

The American Occupational Therapy Foundation promotes a society in which individuals, regardless of age or ability, may participate in occupations of their choice that give meaning to their lives and foster health and well being.

Through its dedication to scientific inquiry, education and leadership development, the Foundation pays tribute to the significance of everyday activities in enabling those who face personal challenges to realize their full potential in society.

Adopted by the AOTF Board of Directors, November 2000.

Breakfast with a Scholar: Juliet B. Schor Explores the Effects of Decreased Leisure Time

Join friends and colleagues for the American Occupational Therapy Foundation's seventh annual Breakfast with a Scholar, on Sunday, April 22nd in conjunction with the 2001 AOTA Conference in Philadelphia. Juliet B. Schor, this year's scholar, is a noted author and Senior Lecturer of the Committee on Degrees in Women's Studies at Harvard University where she has been teaching economics and women's studies since 1984. Schor is also a founding member of the Center for a New American Dream, an organization devoted to making lifestyles more sustainable.

In her New York Times best seller, The Overworked American: The Unexpected Decline of Leisure, Schor explores the effects of increasing work weeks and decreasing leisure time. She interprets leisure as not just idle relaxation, but also the diverse unpaid activities that society requires, from civic participation to voluntary caring for the young and the old. "Americans connect less with their communities these days," says Schor. "Many potentially satisfying leisure skills are off-limits because they take too much time."

Come and hear Schor share her research on work and leisure when she addresses how a lack of leisure time can alter and affect our occupations throughout life.

Your attendance will generously support the Foundation's vital research and education programs on behalf of the profession. Tickets ($40) include breakfast and may be purchased via AOTA's Conference Registration, or by calling Sue Mitchell, AOTF's Development Associate, at 301-652-2682, x2552.

AOTF Hosts an Evening at the Rodin Museum

You won't want to miss this 2001 Conference event. Join friends of AOTF at a private showing of the works of the great French sculptor Auguste Rodin. The Rodin Museum houses over 100 of the artist's plaster studies, drawings, books, and bronze casts including The Thinker and The Gates of Hell.

Take this opportunity to explore the greatest Rodin collection outside of Paris while you network with other practitioners and enjoy fine hors d'oeuvres and an open bar in one of Philadelphia's most unique venues.

Your attendance on Saturday, April 21st from 6:00 to 9:00 p.m. will help raise funds to support the Foundation's research and education programs. Tickets may be purchased for $100 each via AOTA's Conference Registration, or by calling Sue Mitchell, AOTF's Development Associate, at 301-652-2682, extension 2552.

Doctoral Network Comes to Philadelphia

The Doctoral Network Breakfast and Annual Meeting will be on Saturday, April 21st, from 7:30 to 9:30 a.m. A panel will make a short presentation that will generate a rousing round-table discussion. Come network with colleagues as you enjoy breakfast and the lively discussion. Tickets may be purchased for $20 via AOTA's Conference Registration. ■

Talbot and Hockenberry Join Board

At its November 2000 meeting, the AOTF Board of Directors elected Jane Davis Rourke as President. Former director, Donald Lang, was elected AOTF Secretary and William Farland was elected to a second term as a public member director. All will serve three-year terms.

Also at the Board's November meeting, veteran occupational therapist, Nancy Holt Talbot, was elected a director. Talbot brings to the AOTF Board a wealth of academic and administrative experience having served as both Dean of Boston University Sargent College of Health and Rehabilitation Sciences and Chairman of its Occupational Therapy Department.

Talbot is committed to professional and community service. She has been an active member of the American Occupational Therapy Association for over 40 years serving in numerous leadership positions including AOTA Treasurer, a member of the Board of Directors of the AOTA Political Action Committee and a member of the AOTA Manpower Commission.

In recent years Nancy Talbot has broadened her volunteer service to include both the Massachusetts Easter Seal Society and the New Hampshire Chapter of Assistive Technology where she currently serves as vice president. Her skills in group facilitation, strategic planning and development provide valuable resources to the Foundation's future partnerships with organizations and consumer groups that share the occupational therapy profession's values concerning occupation and health.

Two-time Peabody Award winning newsman, John Hockenberry, joined the AOTF Board of Directors in January for a two-year term as a public member director. In 1996, he became a correspondent for "Dateline NBC" after a fifteen-year career in broadcast news at National Public Radio and ABC News. Hockenberry is the author of Moving Violations: War Zones, Wheelchairs and Declarations of Independence, his memoir of life as a foreign correspondent and of overcoming obstacles. He has also written for The New York Times, The Columbia Journalism Review, Modern Maturity, The Washington Post, ID Magazine, and The New Yorker.

During the Persian Gulf War (1990-1991), Hockenberry was assigned to the Middle East, filing reports from Israel, Tunisia, Morocco, Jordan, Turkey, Iraq, and Iran. He also spent two years (1988-90) as a correspondent based in Jerusalem during the most intensive Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Hockenberry brings incredible expertise to the AOTF Board as both an articulate advocate for people with disabilities and a strong spokesperson for occupational therapy. ■

Once Again, Philadelphia Embraces OT

This year's AOTA Annual Conference and Exposition marks the 57th anniversary of Eleanor Roosevelt's opening of the "Occupational Therapy in War and Peace" exhibit at the Philadelphia Art Alliance. This hands-on exhibit featured occupational therapists demonstrating their work as well as pictures and finished materials.

The first lady was a great champion of occupational therapy. She was familiar with the contributions that occupational therapists made particularly during the war and was a strong advocate for increasing the profession's position in civilian hospitals.

Eleanor Roosevelt praised occupational therapy describing it as "a highly valuable contribution to the rehabilitation program". In her remarks she drew from her personal experience with wounded service men who were "restored mentally and made economically independent through occupational therapy" (The Philadelphia Record, April 18, 1944, p. 6).

The Art Alliance of Philadelphia, founded in 1915, is the oldest multidisciplinary art center in the United States. It is located in the historic Wetherill mansion on Rittenhouse Square.

Decade of Support from Longtime Friend

Mary Muhlenhaupt, OTR, FAOTA, is the kind of friend that the occupational therapy profession wants to have.

A practitioner with twenty-five years of experience, Muhlenhaupt's interests reach far and wide — from her involvement with the New York OT Association to her volunteer service as a fellow and member of AOTA's Board of Directors. Muhlenhaupt is currently completing a graduate program as well as coordinating an early intervention outcomes study.

A steadfast contributor, Muhlenhaupt has supported the Foundation for more than ten years. "My initial involvement was limited to contributions and subscriptions to OTJR," said Muhlenhaupt. "I also contributed to the Foundation's Annual Auction."

As President of the New York State OT Association, Muhlenhaupt worked to transfer the management of NYOTA's scholarship program to the Foundation. Her 1994 election to AOTA's Board of Directors created an opportunity for Muhlenhaupt to work with AOTF Presidents and its Executive Director, Martha Kirkland.

"Mary has been a great role model for professional service and leadership. She contributes to AOTF in many ways and is always eager to support our programs and special events," said Kirkland.

Muhlenhaupt recently made a contribution to the Annual Giving Campaign and encourages colleagues to do the same. "AOTF is dedicated to the interests of the profession. The Foundation's activities have direct relevance to our current and future livelihood," explains Muhlenhaupt. "The push to increase accountability and generate evidence related to what we do continues to grow stronger. All practitioners have a stake in seeing this to reality. Contributing to AOTF is one way to voice this recognition and make it happen."

The Foundation is grateful to have such a dedicated and accomplished ally.

Delana Honaker: From Intern to Contributor

Delana Honaker, MA, OTR, BCP has been an avid supporter of AOTF since 1994 when she was the first baccalaureate student Nedra Gillette, Director of Research Resources, accepted for the research internship program, an elective fieldwork placement.

Honaker currently works as Lead Occupational Therapist for the Lubbock Independent School District in West Texas and consults with several regional educational service centers. Her caseload primarily includes children with autism and sensory integration dysfunction about whom Honaker says, "The best thing about working with these kids is that I have learned to treasure messy, firm hugs and to laugh at myself when the child literally follows my ambiguous instructions!"

In addition to her busy practice, Honaker earned her master's degree from Texas Woman's University. The basis of her master's thesis, The impact of occupational activities and wellness in elders, was a small qualitative research study at a local senior citizen center. The study was designed and conducted during her AOTF internship. For two years, Honaker was an adjunct professor for Texas Tech Health Sciences Center in Lubbock, Texas. Currently, she is a doctoral candidate at Texas Woman's University in Denton, Texas, and this month is putting the finishing touches on her dissertation, Professional Transitions: An Exploration of the Occupational Adaptation Model of Professional Development. During her spare time, Honaker has also produced a handwriting development video/model and her own web site.

Since 1996, Honaker has supported the Foundation through her annual contributions and attendance at AOTF events, such as Breakfast with a Scholar. "My experience at AOTF was truly phenomenal. My confidence in myself as a therapist and the realization that I could contribute locally and globally to the profession were greatly influenced by the examples set by Nedra Gillette, Mary Binderman, and Martha Kirkland. While I know that I can never repay these wonderful women for their support and graciousness, I feel it is nevertheless imperative to aid Foundation programs in whatever way I can."

When asked about her future goals, Honaker replied, "My immediate focus is to graduate in May 2001 with my PhD and in July I'll begin my training as an ACOTE Evaluator. After that I'm just planning to be open to the wonderful possibilities of our profession, in other words, I don't know what I'll be when I grow up but I do know as long as I stay in occupational therapy, it will be something enjoyable, challenging, and very occupation-based!"

Howe Remembers Foundation

AOTF is the grateful beneficiary of a bequest from the estate of Alice H. Howe who died on July 1, 2000 in Estes Park, Colorado. Howe received both her bachelor and master of arts from Colorado College and her occupational therapy education from the University of Southern California. She served in the US Army between 1946 and 1953 after which she pursued her clinical interests in chronic illness and perceptual motor dysfunction. Howe retired to Stuart, Florida and in the early 1970's moved to Estes Park. Her favorite occupations included community service and fishing. Howe's bequest will enable AOTF to move forward with the programs of the Institute and support faculty development. ■

My Discovery of Occupational Therapy:

An interview with Cheryl Mattingly as told to Margo Johnson

I am a medical anthropologist, and I became one because of occupational therapy. Occupational therapy completely changed my professional life.

To explain: back in the mid-1980's I was a PhD candidate in anthropology and urban studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), and I was interested in professions and institutions as cultures. For my thesis I was studying the World Bank as a culture of international development.

I was also interested in two other issues, both of which would ultimately make occupational therapy attractive to me. One was the relationship of theory to practice. At MIT I had picked up some ideas from Donald Schön and others that involved a critique of the strict division between theory and practice, and also of the idea that professional knowledge and professional practice are simply the application of theory. So I was interested in "practical reasoning" (clinical reasoning, in the medical world), that is, how professionals figure out what they should do. I thought theory was helpful in that process, but I didn't believe it answered all the questions professionals faced.

The other issue was the professional-client relationship. If theory doesn't dictate what professionals do, then how do they try to understand what their clients need? Further, how do professionals decide what they can bring to what they and their clients perceive as the clients' needs? In looking at this issue, I was thinking about it as a cultural one; two people, very likely from different worlds, whose lives intersect and have to collaborate or connect in some way.

These issues have been career-long questions for me. A third factor that made occupational therapy attractive came to light as I began investigating how a variety of professionals made sense of their clients. I realized that one of the ways they did so was by telling stories about their clients, often to one another, especially when their clients didn't act the way they wanted them to act. Even in occupational therapy, which tries to involve clients in choices, clients sometimes don't want to exercise any of the choices or even see the therapist. So I was very interested in storytelling as a vehicle for clinical reasoning.

There I was, sitting in the World Bank back in 1986, hating what I was doing. Nedra Gillette of AOTF called. She said that she had talked to Donald Schön and had read some of his work. There was this profession, occupational therapy, and that its Foundation, which she worked for, wanted to do a study of occupational therapy practice. I was shocked. Professions rarely seek out people to study them. I also was intrigued. I had no clue what occupational therapists were. I had avoided hospitals at all costs. I didn't know anything about medical professions. All the practices I had studied had been completely different, for example, art teachers and community organizers.

AOTF offered me a two-year job conducting an ethnographic study of occupational therapy. I accepted. Back in Boston, Nedra and I visited various hospitals to decide where the study should take place. I became fascinated with what I saw; what were these people doing? They seemed to be medical, they used splints and such, but they used games and weird-looking forks and things as well. Also, occupational therapy seemed to have the holistic view that anthropology did.

In the course of that study, I came to love occupational therapy for a couple of reasons.

First, I just liked a lot of the occupational therapists I met. They tried to connect with their clients, to make what they had to offer fit into their clients' worlds. This too connected with anthropology, which I view as the study of humans carrying out their lives.

Second, I was moved by occupational therapists' ability to connect with clients who had profound disabilities. I was impressed with how therapists tried to help these clients live with their bodies, with how therapists created "moments" that helped these clients see what life could be. One therapist, for example, helped a person with a spinal-cord injury maneuver his wheelchair to the hospital gift shop. Over time I have paid attention to these moments co-constructed by the therapist and the client.

While I was doing the study for AOTF, anthropologists were beginning to talk about the disability experience but generally in ways that were critical of health care professionals. They presumed that practitioners weren't attentive to the experience and life situations of those with disabilities. They didn't know that there was a health care profession that really tried to attend to the client's perspective. I saw that occupational therapy had something to contribute to anthropology.

Eventually I dropped my thesis work on the World Bank and instead wrote a thesis on occupational therapy based on my ethnographic study. My collaborator was Maureen Hayes Fleming, an occupational therapy professor at Tufts University. We used to say that we were "bringing language to practice", that is, helping clinicians articulate what they were doing. ■

AOTF Mission

The American Occupational Therapy Foundation is a 501(c)(3) charitable, nonprofit organization dedicated to refining and expanding the body of knowledge of occupational therapy, advancing practice of the highest quality, and promoting understanding of the value of occupation in the interest of the public.
